Holocaust revisited
Study abroad student visits Auschwitz

Allison Riley, Urban Campus
London Correspondent

“I freed Germany of the stupid and the degrading failurities of conscience, morality… we will train young people before whom the whole world will tremble. I want young people capable of violence, impertious, relentless, cruel.” This shocking comment was made by Adolf Hitler. The comment becomes even more appalling after visiting Auschwitz, one of Hitler’s death camps.

I started out in Krakow, Poland, and had to take an hour bus ride to Oswiecim, the city where Auschwitz is located. Upon arrival the chills started to set in. The idea that less than seventy-five years ago an ethnic cleansing took place, made my everyday problems seem petty and cheap. While I chose not to take a guided tour, the exhibits were simply astounding. I could sense the fear that radiated from the prisoners of Auschwitz.

Auschwitz I is less than twenty times the size of the additional concentration camp Auschwitz II just down the road. As I walked in to the actual camp, I walked under an iron archway reading “Arbeit Macht Frei” meaning “Work is Liberation.” The Holocaust victims were under the assumption when they arrived that they were simply being detained, so much and every family came with all belongings in hand, pots and pans, clothing, hairbrushes, children’s toys, everything. Upon arrival they were separated into men, women, and weak. Each of the groups had to forfeit their personal belongings, strip down to bare skin, be washed, and then given a number.

The first three years of Auschwitz each of the prisoners’ mug shots were taken and numbered and given clothes and shoes that didn’t fit along with a colored patch showing why they were in Auschwitz, whether it be because they were Jewish, Gypsy, Orthodox, or a criminal, etc. As the population grew, they were numbed and in the later years tricked into a shower upon arrival, which was a gas chamber disguised as a showering room with faucets and had no water hooked up to them, just the lethal gases.

The men were usually put straight to work doing labor that the Nazi’s knew would break them down and eventually after breaking their souls, would also break down their bodies. The men were expected to do this work for twelve to eighteen hours a day with only 560-750 calories of food each day, and if they were lucky, they were able to sleep on piles of hay, while the others were forced into standing chambers to sleep, all which was simply unimaginable to me, a person hoping to one day have a NASA approved TempurPedic™ bed. While the men were put to work, the women and children were starved and secluded. Many of these women and children were tested in scientific experiments that would inevitably kill them.

One of the most disturbing exhibits was named “Evidence of the Holocaust.” This bunker or building housed many of the artifacts that prove the Holocaust did, in fact, happen. They retain this evidence because there are still some who say that the Holocaust never happened and in many other cases the Nazi’s destroyed the evidence from other concentration camps before the eventual Allied liberation. Some of the evidence was contained in exhibits two to three times the size of a basic DMACC classroom. These cases were filed with the shoes, pots and pans, and hairbrushes. However, the most disturbing material artifacts were the suitcases that had the names of the people entering the camp on them. The feeling I felt was indescribable, it is heart-wrenching, soul-crushing, and unimaginable. These people were outcasted, broken down and made into animals.

Up until around May of 1943, the women were allowed to keep their hair, but that changed and every woman who entered from then on had to have her head shaved just like the men. In the “Evidence of the Holocaust” exhibits they still have a lot of that.
DMACC custodian will have second surgery this week
Shane Meier

DMACC custodian Joey Highland, 24 of Boone is absent this week so he can have surgery to remove the rest of a tennis ball-sized tumor that was discovered late last year. He has already had one surgery to remove 80 percent of the tumor and now doctors are going to remove the rest.

The cancer is known as bilateral acoustic neurofibromatosis, or NF2. It is a genetic disorder of chromosome 22 and it occurs in one out every 40,000 births.

Highland’s troubles began on Oct 31, 2008, when after having trouble with his vision, went to the eye doctor and discovered that his optic nerve was swollen. A week after this, Highland had an MRI done at the McFarland clinic and discovered the tumor. He was then sent to Iowa City to undergo surgery to remove the tumor.

The surgery lasted 13 hours and affected eight of the 12 nerves in his brain stem. The tumor was growing on the eighth nerve that controls hearing and balance. They had to remove the right side of the eighth nerve in addition to the inner part of Highland’s right ear so that they could remove the tumor rendering him partially deaf. It took them five hours to remove. In total they removed 80 percent of the tumor.

After the surgery, he spent two days in an ICU and spent two months in physical therapy to regain his balance that he attended two times a week. He also suffered a staph infection on the incision.

The second operation is only the beginning for Highland. In 10-12 years, he will have to have the inner part of his left ear removed, which will render him completely deaf.

His family is currently attending sign language classes in preparation for this.

Six members of DMACC’s Boone campus’ professional business organization, the Omicron Zeta chapter of Phi Beta Lambda (PBL), were sent to the 63rd annual Iowa Phi Beta Lambda State Leadership Conference on March 6 and 7.

“Students competed against students from across the state and South Dakota who were from two-and-four-year colleges,” said Linda Plueger, PBL advisor.

The conference took place at the University of Northern Iowa in Cedar Falls, where members competed with over 80 other business students from Iowa and South Dakota to represent the state in the National Leadership Conference held in Anaheim, California, in June.

Ten colleges participated in the conference, including Ashford University, DMACC’s Boone, Des Moines and West chapters, Grand View University, Iowa State University, National Virtual Chapter, University of Northern Iowa, Upper Iowa University and Dakota State University.

Students competed as chapters, teams and individuals in events such as accounting for professionals, business communications, word processing and business graphics. Students who placed first or second in their events have the opportunity to travel to California for the national competition.

Several students from the Boone campus placed in the top five of their events, and the Boone campus chapter also received an award for the second largest PBL chapter in Iowa and South Dakota.

“DMACC Boone campus has smart students because every one of the students who attended placed in the top five in at least one event,” said Plueger.

Along with competing against other PBL students from across Iowa and South Dakota, state officers were also elected, including Joni Rent Schuler for secretary, Reggie Stuhldryder for historian and reporter and Mikki Winebrenner for treasurer.

“This is the first semester that I had three DMACC Boone students run for state officers are win,” said Plueger.

In addition to competing in the State Leadership Conference, PBL participates in a number of other activities throughout the year, such as fundraising, adopting a family at during the holidays, Adopt-a-Highway, field trips and various other service projects.

And student interested in becoming a PBL member can contact Linda Plueger at lplueger@dmacc.edu.

Basketball coach named full time athletic director

Justin Mitchell

Sports Writer

Orv Salmon is stepping down as the head coach of the men’s basketball team, but he will remain as the athletic director for the Bears.

During this past season, Salmon’s ninth with the Bears, they posted a record of 18-11 before losing to the Ellsworth Panthers in the second round of the Division II tournament. During his tenure as head coach, Salmon has posted an overall record of 235-60, while leading the Bears to two national elite eights and one national final four appearance. He has also helped coach and developed 7 All-American players.

When asked why he chose to step down now, Salmon replied, “I’ve been thinking about this for about a year and a half now and I think it’s the right time.”

The resignation of Salmon from the head-coaching job allows him to focus more on his work as athletic director. Focusing and improving the performance of DMACC’s other seven athletic programs is now Salmon’s main focus. “I’ve had a lot of fun coaching, but I’m getting older and the players always stay the same age,” said Salmon jokingly.

The process for finding a replacement now begins for the Bears and assistant coach BJ.

McGinn is in consideration for the position according to Salmon. He has done very well as my assistant for three seasons.” McGinn has previous head coaching stint for two years at NJCAA Division I Eastern Arizona College, where he helped guide the Gauchos to a 37-23 record while producing one all-American.

He has also had previous assistant coaching experience while serving as an assistant for NJCAA Division II Wayne State College in Nebraska for three seasons.

Bears baseball opens spring season on fire

Justin Mitchell

Sports Writer

The Bears are proving to their opponents that they deserved their number 1 preseason ranking. The Bears opened the season on a road trip with stops through Kansas City Missouri, Texas, and Oklahoma and they dominated.

Starting the season with a 13 game win streak, the Bears offense averaged 9.6 runs a game while holding their opponents to 2.4 runs a game.

Head coach Dan Fitzgerald credits the fast start to his team’s talent, “This team is very talented and all of their hard work is paying off.” The scrapping Bears offense is lead by the dynamic duo of Jake Astor and Joel Hutter, who are second and two on the team in batting average, hits, and runs batted in.

While the offense has been lighting up scoreboards left and right with an overall team batting average of .346, the pitching has been equally as dominating through the season’s first 20 games. The staff has posted a team earned run average of 3.28 and the defense behind the pitchers has been solid. Staff ace Patrick Cooper is tied for second on the team in earned run average with a 2.33 and he is first in innings pitched with 21. Not only does Cooper lead the team in strikeouts, he leads all division II pitchers with 28.

The Bears (21-3) looked to continue their dominating ways as they began conference play.

“We have to make sure that when conference play starts we continue to play our best baseball and focus on winning every game,” said Fitzgerald.

When asked if there was a difference in preparing for conference opponents and teams they have never faced before, he replied, “There’s no difference to our guys because they take the field against any opponent with an expectancy to win.”

The Bears began their in conference season by trashing Iowa Central Community College with a four game series sweep.

Five Bear women players named to All-Region Team

DMACC—Five Bear women’s basketball players were named to the Iowa Community College Athletic Conference Division II All-Region Team.

Sophomores Ellie Ritscher of Keystone and Likeisha Dotson of Sioux City were named to the Second Team All-Region, while sophomore Ciera McGaughy of Detroit and freshman Marni Jacobsen of Spencer were named to the Second Team All-Region. Sophomore Brittney McKown of Fairbank was named to the Third Team All-Region. Ritscher was named to the First Team All-Region last year as well. McCaughy is also a repeat Second Team All-Region selection.

Ritcher averaged 11.3 points and 6.6 rebounds per game for the Bears. Dotson averaged 12.3 points and 8.7 rebounds per contest and made 51 percent of her field goal attempts for the year. McCaughy averaged 7.1 points and 3.5 rebounds per game and had 56 steals for the Bears in the 2008-09 season. Jacobsen maintained a 12.5 point and 6.0 rebound per game average for the Bears. McKown averaged 8.6 points per game and led the team with 65 three-point field goals and made 83 percent of her free throw attempts.

Three Bear women players make the All-Region teams

DMACC—A Des Moines Area Community College Boone Bear’s Men’s Basketball player has made the Iowa Community College Athletic Conference Division II Men’s All-Region First Team, another has been named to the Second Team and a third has been named to the Honorable Mention Team.

Scott Windom of Cartersville, GA was named to the First Team, while Tavaryus Gray of Orlando, FL was named to the Second Team. Brad Burton of Toledo, OH was named to the Honorable Mention Team. All three are freshmen.

Windom, a 6’ 5” forward, led the Bears in scoring averaging 15.1 points per game while connecting on 59 percent of his field goal attempts. He also led the team in rebounds, averaging 7.2 rebounds per contest.

The 6’ 3” Gray made a team high 65 three point shots while averaging 14.1 points. He also averaged 4.2 boards per game. Burton, a 6’2 guard, averaged 5.8 points and 4.2 rebounds per game for the Bears.
Grotto of the Redemption in West Bend well worth visiting

Shane Meier
Layout Editor

There are many tourist traps throughout the USA. Most are just stupid ploys meant to draw people off the road like the world’s second biggest ball of twine. There is one in Iowa that is worth seeing however, the Grotto of the Redemption, which I went to see this spring break.

The Grotto of the Redemption, located in West Bend, was built by Father Paul Dobberstein after surviving a bout of pneumonia. It is said that he prayed to the Virgin Mary to save his life and he would build a shrine in her honor. Father Dobberstein started building the Grotto in 1912, and worked on it until his death in 1954, after which Father Grieving took over until his death in 2002.

The Grotto consists of 13 areas, all of which are scenes from Christian beliefs. The first one that we saw was the Sermon on the Mount. It features a statue of Jesus beside the sermon that he preached that day. It usually has water below it, but because it was so early in the year the snow had yet to melt inside it when I went.

The next Grotto we visited was the Paradise Lost. This Grotto is easily missed because it is tucked away in a walkway and not easily seen. The part that is most notable is the serpent made of jade located next to the walkway, adjacent to the walkway next to it. There are also numerous statues depicting the scene of Adam and Eve being cast out.

After this most people either continue down the path which leads to two rows of shrines that lay on either side of the walkway, each of which displays the eight Stations of the Cross - a belief exclusive to the Catholics. Or, they will turn east encountering the 10 Commandments Grotto. This Grotto, in my opinion, is the most beautiful of them all because of the dome that it has in the interior. In addition to the dome, it has the 10 Commandments displayed on the interior wall.

To the south of the 10 Commandments Grotto is a courtyard that displays the memorial wall of all the people who have contributed to the Grotto over the years. This area has no particular name, but it can only be described as a courtyard due to the benches, trees, and shrubs in it.

West of here you can either exit south out of the Grotto or proceed to the Garden of Gethsemane Grotto or you can climb up atop the Grotto and take in the view. I have never visited the Gethsemane Grotto because it’s out of the way and is easy to miss. The Gethsemane Grotto depicts the scene where Jesus is arrested after being betrayed by Judas.

The top of the Grotto is personally my favorite spot. From up there you can look down and see the entire Grotto and the surrounding countryside. There are three areas atop the Grotto you can look out from, but the very top one is the most spectacular form there you can see the very top of the Grotto which is crowned with a cross.

On the west side of the Grotto you have the final two areas the Bethlehem scene, and the scene of Jesus living in Nazareth. These are my least favorite because they are both very plain and uninteresting. On the west end you also have a statue of Father Dobberstein and the museum dedicated to the Grotto’s construction.

The other place to visit at the Grotto site is the Christmas Chapel located next store to the Grotto. The Christmas Chapel is gothic style cathedral with stained glass windows, a beautiful wooden altar, and a Grotto dedicated to the birth of Christ which houses rocks which were deemed to delicate to be displayed on the Grotto itself. The chapel also features a fountain located in front of it.

The Grotto overall is defiantly worth going out to see. I know I left out a lot of details about it, but a lot of it is hard to describe in words. It is something that you just have to see for yourself. In the end, it is a site worth seeing even if you’re not Catholic or even religious at all because it is an impressive piece of artistic architecture with an interesting story attached to it. Take my advice - skip out on those other tourist traps and make your way up to West Bend.
The TUBE

Underground in London

Rachel Pickett, Urban

Kristine Phannes, Boone

London Correspondents

On Feb. 7, 17 students from DMACC started their journey to study abroad in London for 10 weeks. During this trip, it has become quite apparent that there are many cultural differences between Iowa and Europe. One such transportation difference became quite apparent while traveling on the underground subway known as the Tube.

The Tube's carriage is silent and reserved for a crowded train. For instance, during rush hour everyone was crammed into a carriage with no room to breathe, but none of the passengers became irritated by the invasion of their personal bubble. In fact, most of the passengers were not speaking or looking at each other in any way, which reflects one of the many differences between the British populace and that of the American populace. British people generally have a more reserved personality in comparison to Americans, who are generally more outspoken.

When riding on the Tube, it became obvious to tell those who were tourists versus the true “Londoners.” The tourists were very loud and drew attention to themselves. They would often speak in a variety of different languages. An extreme example of touristic jargon, which was witnessed by some of the DMACC students, was a group of foreign girls using the standing hand rails for pole dancing. Most in the Tube’s carriage appeared to be appalled by their inappropriate and outrage behavior.

The true Londoners would be well-equipped with a book, an iPod, or a newspaper to entertain themselves on their ride to their place. We thoroughly recommend reading about the history of the city and the many differences between the British populace and that of Greece and the United States.

It is apparent that London is very different from any city in the United States. There are many big cities in the United States that have their own subways, but they are not as easy to navigate as the London Tube. The people in the United States are not as tolerant to the invasion of their personal space as they are in London. This is due to their more reserved personalities. We have found London to be a very upbeat and exciting place. We thoroughly recommend other students to come and see for themselves World War II on a different scale than children here in Europe. Europe was much more affected by the cruel scenarios caused by the Nazi invasions and Adolf Hitler.

The impact Auschwitz had on me is one I will never forget. It was such a powerful and disturbing place, and it made me look at the situation in a whole new light.

I always knew that innocent people were being massacred, but going to the actual site where roughly 1.4 million died made me look at the situation even more disturbing. It was such a powerful and disturbing place, and it made me look at the situation in a whole new light.

Anyone who has the chance to experience this awful place should. Not only does a visit put World War II on a different scale than children here in Europe. Europe was much more affected by the cruel scenarios caused by the Nazi invasions and Adolf Hitler.

The true Londoners would be well-equipped with a book, an iPod, or a newspaper to entertain themselves on their ride to their destination. Some may carry on a quiet conversation with someone near them if it were someone they know. They would not strike up a conversation with strangers, unlike people from the United States. These actions could possibly be viewed as snobbish, but in fact, it is due to their more reserved personalities.

Another issue that has been noted about the Tube is the great mass of people who use it. During early morning and late afternoon, the Tube is heaving with adults going to and from work. One carriage was so packed there was barely room to breathe. In some cases, even when there is no room left in a carriage, passengers shove their way into the carriage and create room. When a carriage is full to the maximum point, several passengers must step out of the carriage to allow other passengers off.

When the Tube is packed or even partially full, accidents can happen. In case they do, there are red emergency handles available to alert the driver of such incidents. When something like this happens, the train automatically comes to a complete standstill and the driver walks through each carriage to make sure everything is okay. The train cannot go any further until the driver knows why the emergency handle was pulled and is assured that every passenger was accounted for.

The museum went on to show how the Holocaust affected each country differently from Greece to Hungary to Poland to the Netherlands to France and more. Each of these countries had experienced the same Nazi turmoil and many of the citizens from each ended up in Auschwitz or a horrible place like it.

Growing up in America, we are taught about the effects of the Holocaust and the impact it had on people. But truly experiencing it first-hand is a completely different experience. It was such a powerful and emotional experience.

Anyone who has the chance to experience this awful place should. Not only does a visit put into a historical perspective, but it also makes you appreciate your freedom.

Housing inspections Annoying or rewarding

Craig VandeVenter
Executive Editor

Monthly housing inspections aren’t a new concept for student residents living in the DMACC owned Borgen Square Apartments. Housing officials conduct inspections on a monthly basis for all residents living in the apartments. For students, this means frantically late night cleaning the night before the inspections are to be done. The inspections might seem like a giant hassle for students, but only for those who do not clean their apartments on a regular basis. In retrospect the inspections serve a much higher purpose than to be a nuisance for students and the only reason that they clean their apartments. It is a way for housing to make sure living quarters are both sanitary and more importantly safe to live under.

As a student resident myself I used to fall partial to the thought that inspections were just a ploy for housing to make unruly students clean up. After looking more into the matter I do not mind the thought of inspections as much as I did before. I came up with a theory of why it is important for someone to check up on residents from time to time.

First of all, everyone likes to feel safe about where he or she lives and whom he or she lives with. So to prevent a potentially dangerous situation between roommates the inspections pose as a way to make sure nothing dangerous, harmful, or even illegal is happening in the apartments. Even though this might not be an issue for all residents very well could be one for a small majority of them.

Secondly, it is a way that a housing official can sort of check on things and make sure that appliances and such are functioning properly in the apartment.

However, the notion made by housing to check up on student’s apartments could also just be an attempt to indirectly make us wash the dishes, vacuum the carpet, and take out the trash properly in the apartment. One thing is for sure though, if students took the time to keep their apartment’s tidyl in-between housing inspections they would not have to worry about cleaning up really late the night before.

Think of it as a stress reliever in this tense and stressful time after midterms but just before finals that we call spring. So take a load off and clean up your apartment once every in a while; who knows maybe it might make things a little less stressful when it comes for finals.

“Choke” review

Greg Laraia
Assistant Layout Editor

The book “Choke” by author Chuck Palahniuk was a very stunning piece of writing. “Choke” is a novel about a troubled young man leading a borderline pathetic lifestyle. He works a petty job at a medieval times re-enactment facility. The main character, Victor Mancini, is in dire need to pay for medical bills of his mothers. She is living in an elder care home. To come up with money for bills he comes up with the ingenious plan to choke on food. By doing so people around him save him. After saving him his rescuers feel they must keep in touch with him and send him money on holidays and his birthday. Throughout the whole story Victor meets many different people who are struggling just as bad as he is.

Many of Palahniuks books are dark and depressing. As disheartening as his stories are they have very good storylines and morals. The stories that Palahniuk writes are particularly aimed at audiences who are young adults to adults. They contain thematic elements involving drugs, sex and descriptive violence.

I enjoyed the book “Choke” because it kept my attention the whole time I was reading it. I could not put it down. I read the whole story in less than 3 days. I felt it was very compelling and could have been written as a true story. The story to me was a horrific story of a young child’s life affecting him as an adult.

As well as this book was written it was very short and fast. Palahniuk has the talent to write a longer story without hav- ing to cram everything into 304 pages. I’m not saying that a book should be 800 pages long but it shouldn’t be crunched together so it’s rushed. I enjoyed reading this book and recommend it to anyone who enjoys reading satirical fiction. After reading this book it made me want to go buy Palahniuks other books and read them also.

According to Greg...

The DMACC Board of Directors will meet Wednesday, April 1st in the Borger Administration Building on the Ankeny Campus to vote upon the proposed cancelation of all second semester finals for spring.

This is the first time in DMACC history that any sort of student led proposal has made it this far in the deliberation process.

If the board votes in favor of the proposal, there is talk of modeling all future spring semesters on this one.

What should students look forward to in the future if the proposal is approved? Students will no longer have to worry about cramming and studying for their spring semester finals at the last second and basically won’t have to try at all in second semesters to follow this one.

Boone campus freshman and leader for the proposal, Jacob Anderson, said “Students will benefit tenfold by being able to focus on their Facebook statuses and making sure their social lives are in order, without the traditional stress of studying for finals.” Anderson who is a member of the golf team said, “My original idea for the proposal came about while playing a practice round of golf with my teammates this past month. We are all behind it one hundred percent. All students are encouraged to check their DMACC daily messages in their email twice everyday for the next week in anticipation of the Board’s decision.

A special note to all readers: If you have made it this far in this editorial, you are in for a surprise. All of the above mentioned information is absolutely and utterly false and made up in every way. Nothing like this has happened, nor will anything like this ever be true. The DMACC Board of Directors. Come on people its spring, better start studying for your finals. Happy April Fool’s Day from all of us here at the Banner.
Horoscopes

Aries: As spring break came to an end, you realized that even though your routine is repetitive, it is not quite as bland as you thought… and having that tan is nice, too.

Taurus: Your birthday is getting closer and you are trying to decide the one thing you might ask for. Go with the item you have been thinking about the longest, it obviously is what you want most.

Gemini: You filled out your bracket and may regret your picks for the final four, but have faith and stay a loyal fan to your number one team.

Cancer: The hint of warm weather makes you think about your birthday and dream of high temperatures - don’t get too ahead of yourself, there may be a little more snow in store for you.

Leo: One of your competitive friends keeps telling you he is going to win his NCAA pool – keep your mouth shut when he finally loses, and maybe buy him a drink with the money you win from yours.

Virgo: Classes seem to be dragging on longer than you would like, but don’t worry, the end of the year will come quicker than you think… maybe before you are ready.

Libra: You are short on money, but with a little bit of looking you are able to find a job doing something that you like, something not a lot of people can find these days.

Scorpio: Even though basketball may not be your thing, other people’s excitement makes it hard for you to stay away from the game. You might have just found your new hobby.

Sagittarius: You have finally decided to do something drastic – weather it be chopping off your hair, moving or switching jobs, don’t be nervous, the change will do you good.

Capricorn: If you don’t already have a team in mind to win the tournament, cheer for the underdogs! It is more fun to see them come out on top than the expected winner…especially if you bet on it.

Aquarius: You decide to check out a new bar or restaurant, and the service is far below par. Don’t be afraid to speak up, they will appreciate your comments and you will probably get something for free.

Pisces: Watching the championship game will be fun, but it will be better when it’s your team playing on a big screen against the team you hate the most! And the winner is…

Iowa Studies Forum on Friday

A Celebration of Iowa’s History, Science, Politics, Literature and Art will take place at the Second Annual Iowa Studies Forum to be held Friday, April 3 in Bldg. #7 on the Des Moines Area Community College Ankeny Campus.

The title of the 2009 Iowa Studies Forum is “Experiencing the Strength of Our Heritage.” The forum will feature lectures, roundtable discussions, re-enactments, multi-media presentations and workshops, all focusing on Iowa’s history and heritage.

The forum is free to Iowa high school and college students and $25 for others. The price includes a continental breakfast and an Iowa luncheon buffet. To register, call www.dmacc.edu/io-studies.

The day-long forum will feature Zachary Michael Jack, editor of Letters to a Young Iowan (2007), as the keynote speaker. The morning features 11 themes with three sessions each.
